CHEF OF THE MONTH: ADISON LEE OF KUU RESTAURANT

Recognized nationally for his celebrated style and flavor, Chef Adison Lee created a new dining experience at KUU Restaurant, one of the best Japanese establishments in Houston, known for offering "an adventure in textures".

Chef Lee's history includes a stint with London's famed Nobu, where he opened the restaurant and served as head chef before returning to the United States. Once in Houston, Lee made a name for himself with Kaneyama, Sushi King, Sage 400, and now Gateway Memorial City's2 KUU Restaurant.

Chef Lee sources his salmon from Norway and Scotland, having it overnighed from across the Atlantic to keep it fresh for his dishes like the Kunseitaro, that is thoughtfully paired with taro, pear, and thyme. Chef Lee's tuna comes from oversea, as well, and makes for a beautiful tartare that can be matched with avocado, unagi, and sesame for a delicious June makimono roll.

NATIONAL COLON CANCER AWARENESS MONTH

MEMORIAL
HERMANN 411

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention says colorectal cancer is the third most common cancer that affects both men and women. However, like many cancers, the key to successfully treating the disease is early detection.

"For many people, colon cancer will not show any symptoms until it's in a late stage. That's why screenings are so important; it gives physicians a chance to catch the cancer, as well as precancerous polyps, at an early stage," says George Sun, M.D., a gastroenterologist affiliated with Memorial Hermann Memorial City Medical Center.

Dr. Sun recommends the average adult get a screening colonoscopy every 10 years, beginning at age 50. However, it's important to discuss your personal risk factors with your physician who may recommend beginning screenings at an earlier age. People are also encouraged to eat a diet high in fiber, limit processed foods, and avoid foods high in saturated fats to lower their risk of developing colon cancer.

GO TO CANCER.MEMORIALHERMANN.ORG/COLON TO SCHEDULE A SCREENING COLONOSCOPY.
